

Johnston and Bankhead of Alabama, Senator Culberson of Texas, Representatives Ellerbe and Finley of South Carolina, and Wiley, Craig, and Burnett of Alabama.

The date of the trial is to be arranged later, at some date to be agreed upon by Mr. Hefflin and counsel for Mr. Hefflin. Mr. Hefflin said this morning that he had not yet had time to arrange for counsel.

According to Representative Clayton, Mr. McCreary, the accidentally injured race track man, had a conference with Mr. Hefflin after the affair last night, in which the Congressman agreed to reimburse him for the expenses incident to the treatment of his wound. Mr. McCreary said Congressman Clayton was not bitter in his attitude toward Mr. Hefflin, and the latter's friends do not believe that he and his wife will push the case against the Alabama Representative.

Neither Mr. nor Mrs. McCreary would make a statement this morning, other than to say that they had engaged Pack, Hinton & Pack to care for their interests as they might develop. Mr. Hefflin's colleagues are of the opinion that Mr. McCreary will only seek redress for the amount of time lost and expense incurred.

Hefflin Attends Session.
Representative Hefflin hurried from the room of Representative Clayton at noon today, saying that he desired to be upon the floor of Congress when it convened. He took his seat as usual, and was immediately surrounded by a large number of Democrats, mostly Southerners, who greeted him most cordially. A good portion of Mr. Hefflin's time this morning was consumed in answering telegrams.

Mr. Hefflin had no comment to make upon the fact that the events of last night bore out statements he made in advocating the "Jim Crow" street cars for Washington. Mr. Hefflin made a sensational speech before the House, February 23, in support of his suggestion, saying in part:

"The passage of my amendment will redound to the good of both races in the District of Columbia. It will remove the friction that you now see upon the street cars every day."

"Put separate compartments in a car. Let the negroes go in their compartment and the whites in theirs. Then this cause of irritation will be removed, and this clashing and ill-feeling, which constantly occurs between the races, will cease. Gentlemen, you may theorize about this, but there are facts connected with it that you must realize sooner or later."

Story of Eye-Witness.
The connected story of the several eye-witnesses to the shooting is as follows: Representative Hefflin, en route to deliver a lecture on "Temperance," at the Metropolitan Methodist Episcopal Church, boarded a Capital Traction car near the Raleigh Hotel about 7 o'clock. Accompanying him was Representative James E. Ellerbe of South Carolina. There were six or seven other persons in the car, including women.

At Seventh street two negroes entered the car, and one of them, at the same time using objectionable language, pulled a flask from his pocket and prepared to take a drink. Seeing several white women on the same car with negroes, Mr. Hefflin remonstrated with the negro, who replied that he'd take a drink if he felt like it.

Representative Ellerbe left the car at this juncture, having reached the Metropolitan Hotel, where he is stopping. Others also left the car, leaving only Mr. Hefflin, the two negroes, and the woman in the car. Mr. Ellerbe at the time did not anticipate any further trouble.

Struck Negro With Revolver.
Mr. Hefflin continued his remonstrance as the negro insisted upon drinking. Lundy's companion attempted to take the flask away from him, whereupon the swearing continued and Lundy arose to take a drink anyway. At this Mr. Hefflin also arose, and the negro is said to have grabbed Mr. Hefflin by the lapel of the coat and made a motion toward his hip pocket. Believing that an attack by the two negroes was planned, Mr. Hefflin pulled his own gun and struck Lundy on the head. He then shoved the revolver under the door and kicked him off the car.

The negroes continued to curse Mr. Hefflin after reaching the ground, and the Representative, who had been rendered unconscious by the blow, fired two shots through the window, one of them hitting Mr. McCreary, who was standing against the door. These two shots, as explained by Representative Clayton, who issued a statement for Mr. Hefflin after the shooting, were fired to prevent the negroes renewing their attack.

At the sound of the first shot, Ellerbe, who had just left the car, ran and picked up Mr. Hefflin. He then summoned the Emergency Hospital ambulance.

McCreary Ordered Carriage.
Upon its arrival McCreary, who had been shot, refused to ride to the hospital with a negro, it is said, and, ordering a carriage, drove to the Emergency, accompanied by Mrs. McCreary. There the bullet was extracted from his leg, his wounds dressed, and he returned to the St. James within a short time.

In the meantime a carriage had been summoned by Representative Ellerbe, and the two Representatives and Police Officer Scriveners were taken to the No. 6 precinct. Realizing that the neighborhood was a thickly settled negro district, Scriveners hurried to the station before it had been generally realized that a shooting scrape had occurred. A thousand or more persons, of both colors, poured out from the neighboring hotels, houses and stores within a minute or two after the shots were fired.

Wounded Man at Hospital.
On reaching the hospital with the wounded negro, who was in a semi-conscious state, it required the efforts of six men to put him under control. Lundy was still intoxicated or under the influence of some drug apparently. He was quieted finally by an examination was made. A bullet wound was in the neck behind the right ear, which at first was thought might result fatally. It was afterward decided that the wound was not fatal, however, and the station was communicated with in order that ball might be arranged for Mr. Hefflin, the figure being named as $5,000.

In the meantime an exciting quest for a bondsman had been going on among the numerous Representatives gathered at noon on the floor of Congress. The difficulty reached them. Owing to the District laws no bondsman is acceptable who does not own unencumbered real estate in the District, and the several bonds offered by Mr. Hefflin's colleagues had to be refused.

Among those who gathered within a few minutes to extend aid to Mr. Hefflin were Representatives Booher of Missouri, Randall of Texas, Webb of North Carolina, Finley of South Carolina, Lewis of Georgia, Bowers of Mississippi, McHenry of Pennsylvania, Gaines and Sims of Tennessee, Favrot of Louisiana, and Clayton, Burnett, Wiley, and Craig of Alabama.

Scores of Messages.
Scores of other Senators and Representatives phoned and Mr. Hefflin was kept busy answering inquiries while his colleagues scoured the section for a qualified bondsman. Finally, after several citizens had come forward, only to discover that they did not fill completely the qualifications, George W. Driver, a restaurant man, was found and willingly affixed his signature. Previous to there had been quite a search by Representatives and policemen for the desired personage. Representatives John Wesley Gaines, being in an automobile in the foreground of the searching.

J. THOMAS HEFFLIN, party. It was thought the problem was solved when R. Callahan, jr., manager of the Metropolitan Hotel, volunteered as bondsman, but it was found that the property was in the name of his father, who was ill, and the search had to be begun all over again. Within a moment after Clerk Potts, of the Police Court, had made out the bond, Mr. Hefflin and his colleagues wended their way from the station house. A crowd of several hundred persons had gathered outside and remained while the entire proceedings were taking place.

Mr. McCreary, who was an innocent bystander in this instance, is a well-known trainer on the New York race track. He is in Washington attending the Federal meet. Mr. Hefflin was waiting for his wife, with whom he had a dinner engagement at 7 o'clock, when he felt the sting of the bullet in his leg. Mrs. McCreary was crossing the street to join her husband when the difficulty in the street car occurred. Mr. McCreary was not slightly injured, and after the extraction of the bullet joined his friends at the hotel.

House Stirred
By the Affray
Of Mr. Hefflin

In the House today, there was a feeling of gloom as a result of the Hefflin shooting affray.

On all sides there were heard expressions of sympathy for Hefflin, coupled with regret that the affair occurred. Among the Southern members, especially, there were declarations of willingness to do everything possible to aid Mr. Hefflin in any manner possible. The Southern members, among whom he has many friends, anxious to help him, naturally of an impetuous temperament, and knowing his views on the race question, they are able to appreciate the chain of circumstances leading up to the affray.

But this comment of sympathy and regret was not confined to the Southerners. It came from all quarters, from the Speaker's room, the House floor, and the committee rooms and offices.

Early in the day there was the greatest anxiety among members to know what the Police Court had taken in the matter, if any. Not for many years has the House been so profoundly stirred.

Wounded Negro
Has Bad Record
In Police Court

Louis Lundy has one of the longest police records of any person in the District of Columbia. He has been arrested time and again on charges of every character, and during the last few years much of his time has been spent in jail.

He was first arrested by Detective Grant in July, 1933, on suspicion of larceny. The case was not prosecuted, but the following day he was locked up on a minor charge. August 12, 1933, he was arrested by Police Officer Cavanaugh, of the First precinct, for carrying concealed weapons. He was found guilty in the Police Court and sentenced to 30 days in jail.

May 9, 1934, he was arrested for petit larceny, and the following month was locked up for a violation of the police regulations. Detectives Harrison and Bauer arrested him May 1, 1935, for the larceny of a ring from a house on First street northwest. He pleaded guilty to petit larceny, and was sent to jail for eleven months and twenty-nine days.

He has been locked up for drunkenness and disorderly conduct on numerous occasions, and the records at headquarters show that he has been convicted of violating the police regulations many times.

Lundy is regarded as one of the most persistent lawbreakers and one of the most desperate negroes with whom the police have ever come in contact. When arrested the first time by Detective Grant, he made threats to get even with the men who arrested him. He has assaulted the officers who arrested him, and for the last five years he has been a source of constant trouble to the police.

Children should not be allowed to drink coffee. It contains a drug—Caffeine—which interferes with the child's natural growth.

Almost any doctor will tell you this. Many are now advising Postum—made from clean hard wheat—as a table beverage in place of coffee. When served hot with good cream, and sugar to taste, it is delicious, cheering, and at the same time, healthful.

Postum contains no coffee or other harmful substance, but includes the "vital phosphates" from the wheat. "There's a Reason."

STATION CAR LINE OBJECT LESSON IN CORPORATE POWER

—Representative Sims

"If the Union Station trackage bill is not passed this session, the people of the United States will have a most illuminating object lesson of what the influence of even local street railway corporations in the National Capital itself is able to accomplish in the way of blocking absolutely necessary legislation pending in Congress."

This is one of the statements made by Representative Sims of Tennessee today regarding the long delay of the House and Senate conferees to agree on the final shape of the bill giving the street railway companies access to the station.

"The District Commissioners of the House," said Mr. Sims, "held daily sessions for several weeks on this bill and finally secured its passage by the House. Conferees were then appointed, and, although I am one of the House conferees, I do not mind saying that the meetings of the conferees committee are altogether too rare."

"One thing of which I am certain—the conferees could come to an agreement within twenty minutes if the street railway companies would signify their willingness to accept the universal transfer provision or the provision for regulation by the District Commissioners or by the Interstate Commerce Commission. I am sure that the conferees, once the railways would make their willingness known to accept these propositions, would be able to settle their other differences in fifteen minutes."

"There would not be any trouble regarding the arrangement of the tracks extending to the station."

"There is no excuse for the attitude of the street railway companies. The great and increasing value and earning power of the various lines should make the companies willing to accede to the universal transfer provision which would prove in a comparatively short time to be a help rather than a financial hindrance."

Moving Picture Men Pirates, Declare Dramatic Producers At Congressional Hearing

William A. Brady, as Spokesman, Demands Protection for Plays, Which, He Says, Are Reproduced by Phonograph and Vitagraph.

An outcry against the moving picture machines, that made the Joint Committee on Patents sit up and take notice, was voiced in the copyright hearing today by the foremost dramatic producers and managers of this country.

They and their attorneys declared that the phonophones, cameraphones, and other moving picture machines, by taking piratical photographs of dramatic productions and reproducing them with phonographic reproductions of the lines of plays, are doing the dramatic business an almost incalculable injury. They also declared that, under the present law, they have no remedy for these injuries, and, therefore, they asked legislation in the pending copyright bills that will save them from the incursions they complained of.

William A. Brady, of New York, who said he has produced 100 plays by American authors, said that only recently a company of his which was producing "Way Down East," in the Middle West had been forced off the road because the picture machines had produced for 6 cents in every one-night stand the pictures and lines of the play, for which his company was charging $1.

"This committee," he said, with emphasis, "is claiming to protect the dramatic authors and producers of the country. Then protect us! That's what we have come down here for, protection. As the law now stands, and as the pending bill now reads, there is no penalty against this moving picture trust that steals our plays and takes away our profits."

Harry Parker, husband of the author of "Way Down East," and himself a dramatic producer corroborated Brady's statement.

Ligon Johnson, New York, attorney for the authors and producers of plays, said the moving picture machine men are "vultures feeding and growing fat on the brains of the authors of this country."

Others who spoke along the same lines were Victor Herbert, Daniel Frohman, Denis O'Brien, E. F. Mawson, Harry H. Williams, and Harry Knowles. Other authors and managers who were present were: Manuel Klein, Clinton Stewart, C. M. K. Harris, Dave Reed, F. D. Richards, Charles Klein, Miss Alice Kesser, Isidore Witmark, Campbell B. Casad, Hollis E. Cooley, and W. R. Jacobs.

The moving picture machine men will be heard by the committee this afternoon in reply to the arguments of the authors and dramatists, and the authors and producers will be given a final hour tonight. This will end the hearings on the subject.
